ANOTHER TARIFF DAY

Stormy Personal Colloquy
in the Senate

LED BY CARTER OF MONTANA

The House Still Occupied With the Van Horne-Tarsney Contest
Election Case.

Washington, February 26.—The tariff crisis in the senate brought another day of intensely dramatic action, of impetuous debate and of stormy personal colloquy. The speech of Senator Carter of Montana, one of the five Republican senators who voted against proceeding with the tariff bill, was the main formal event of the day. There was added interest in the speech, owing to Mr. Carter's position as chairman of national committee. The senator used very plain words in denouncing what he termed the move to drive him and his silver associates out of the Republican party. This, however, was but the prelude to more stirring events.

Mr. Carter closed at 2:15 o'clock and was greeted with hearty applause from the crowded galleries and congratulations from a number of his colleagues. Hoar immediately rose to question Mr. Carter. The Massachusetts senator prefaced his question by referring to his long continued support of a protection to wool, even when the representatives of western wool growing states voted for free wool. Mr. Hoar took up the charge of Mr. Carter that eastern Republicans had been false to the platform of 1892. Did the Montana senator mean, asked Hoar, that the construction placed on that platform by President Harrison was false and illogical?

The senator, Carter, had referred to Republican senators joining President Cleveland, but Mr. Hoar called attention to the overwhelming majority which the Republican states of New England had given against Mr. Cleveland's party. Hoar then asked specifically to Mr. Carter: "I ask the senator whether we are to understand him to say that if he fails to convince his Republican associates, he then proposes to say to us 'You shall not pass any protective tariff bill unless you surrender your convictions to us.' If a protective tariff bill is hereafter presented, fair and just, on wool, lead off fruit, and the various industries of the west, does the senator propose to say that he will not vote it in, just as now, unless we surrendered our convictions to him?"

Mr. Carter sauntered the floor as soon as Mr. Hoar closed and, amid impressive silence, began a measured and deliberate reply. After expressing his sense of honor at being thus interrogated by the veteran Mr. Hoar, Mr. Carter added that while Republicans who believed that the party platform was carried to its full fruition by direct act of Congress could not be fully satisfied with the admission and the purposes of Mr. Harrison, they did feel and were led to feel by his constant efforts that the administration was honestly seeking to give expression to Republican opinion on the financial question.

Mr. Carter further stated that the interpretation placed on the Minneapolis platform by the Republicans of the East would lead them to vote out the last vestige of legislation favorable to silver. With such a construction of the Minneapolis platform, the silver Republicans were at war now, and would continue to be so.

At this point Mr. Gear interjected the question: "Does not the senator know that the Minneapolis platform was drawn largely by two senators on this floor, one from New England and the other from Montana? (Teller,) and that they were satisfied with that platform?"

"Admitted," responded Mr. Carter, "but neither of those senators understand with their knowledge of the English language and what it ordinarily means, that the platform could be construed into total obliteration of all legislation on the statute books in favor of silver."

Mr. Gear—but the senator from Colorado thought he could carry Colorado for the Republican ticket on that platform.

Mr. Carter—Yes, and that he did on the reputation of the Republican party for redeeming its pledges and promises, and that it would carry out in good faith the platform.

Continuing Mr. Carter made a brief reply to Mr. Hoar's question whether, if defeated in their efforts at revising such legislation as they desired, the silver Republicans would sever their connection with the party by saying that the Republicans of the West who constructed the platform of 1892 as favorable to silver would be the last to desert the party, and that it others take a different view of the question should find iniquitous upon them to leave the vessel, the western men would give with sorrow upon the departure of the vessel.

The remark of Mr. Carter took his seat, and was described in earnest tones that about 2 per cent of the people of the east would go with Grover Cleveland. We are not gold monetarists," he was proceeding to say when interrupted by Mr. Teller, by the remark that this was strange in view of the support the majority of the eastern Republicans in Congress had given the President.

"We deny that," retorted Hoar, who then went on to contend that the Republicans of the east have a double standard of value, in accordance with the constitution and the doctrine as promulgated by Alexander Hamilton.

Teller obtained the floor to explain his connection with the formation of the Republican platform of 1892. He said he had drafted the first part of the financial plank reading: "The American people from tradition and intent favor bimetallism, and the Republican party demands the use of both gold and silver in coinage," and that its inclusion in the platform had been secured by the joint efforts of himself and Senator Jones of Nevada after they had labored with the committee on resolutions all night to secure a declaration for free coinage. It was, he said, not responsible for the modifications of this declaration. He, however, considered this a position favorable to silver because of the demands of the recognition of the two metals as standard money. Still he said at the time that the qualifications afterwards adopted would be jettisoned with by skillful politicians who did not approve it.

Hoar asked if the fact that the committee on platform of the convention of 1892 had voted down a proposition for free coinage was not properly interpreted to mean that the committee was opposed to it. Mr. Teller replied that many people in the country had interpreted the declaration to mean free coinage, but what he complained of was the platform had been practically

MURDERERS LYNCHED

Wichita Falls Bank Robbers
Strung Up.

CRAWFORD CONFESSION ROBBERY
"The Kid" Was Twenty Years Old,
"Dead Game and Ready to Die."

DALLAS, Tex., February 26.—A special to the News from Wichita Falls, Texas, says: At 8:30 o'clock tonight a mob of several thousand persons attacked the jail here where Foster Crawford and "The Kid" were confined. After a show of resistance on the part of the authorities the mob battered in the jail doors and forcibly took possession of the prisoners. The two men were taken to the bank which they attempted to rob yesterday and an improvised scaffold was erected. The first impulse of the half crazed mob was to burn the prisoners but calmer counsel prevailed. Yells of "Hang 'The Kid' first," went up. Then others "no, hang the oldest first." "The Kid" refused to say a word and those having him in charge yanked him onto the box. The scene was horrid indeed. He had high wooden boots, thick stockings and the "buckaroo game" of the big, gold standard advocates. With impudicous tongue and addressing himself to Mr. Sherman, Mr. Teller repudiated the suggestion that the state of Colorado would ever accept the dishonest interpretation of bimetallism here presented, and if it did, added Teller, he would cease to represent that state in the United States senate.

The senator (Sherman) speaks of bimetallism by Sherman were erroneous, were contrary to those accepted at state and national conventions, contrary to the accepted understanding of France and other foreign countries. The Republican party could not be satisfied and said it was by the adoption of the gold and the "buckaroo game" of the big, gold standard advocates. With impudicous tongue and addressing himself to Mr. Sherman, Mr. Teller repudiated the suggestion that the state of Colorado would ever accept the dishonest interpretation of bimetallism here presented, and if it did, added Teller, he would cease to represent that state in the United States senate.

He said: "By—there's all right. I am the son of a man who was hanged to a tree to rise up and haunt him. The safety of the Republican party lies in adherence to honest, sound money made up of the two metals, side by side, as from time immemorial. But if the Republican party puts itself under the leadership of the senator from Ohio (Sherman) the glory of the past will be often repeated." He said: "I am the son of a man who was hanged to a tree to rise up and haunt him. The safety of the Republican party lies in adherence to honest, sound money made up of the two metals, side by side, as from time immemorial. But if the Republican party puts itself under the leadership of the senator from Ohio (Sherman) the glory of the past will be often repeated."

The 2:30 o'clock the Cuban question, which had been laid aside since 2 o'clock, secured the right of way, and White, Democrat of California, addressed the senate.

White expressing his sympathy for the Cubans in their struggle, urged the need of an orderly procedure. The senator gave much attention to the legal paces involved in the recognition of the independence of Cuba, arguing that it was the Senate to determine that the President would not recognize the independence should circumstances warrant.

The Kid said: "I am 20 years of age. I am dead game and ready to die; so ahead."

In an instant he was pulled up above the throng. He never quivered or kicked. He just went up in the air and then he stopped. He was hanging by his feet in the crowd.

All the while Crawford was a spectator of the scene. He began to waken and confessed, giving some valuable information. He placed the responsibility for the crime on "The Kid." The mob shamed him on the improvised scaffold, from which he had been attempting to jump, and his hand was about as level with the dangling foot of his companion. He asked for Captain Burnett. The latter was a spectator in the crowd. He went to Crawford and had a long talk. Crawford had worked on Burnett's ranch for years and was a trusted man. He began stealing his employer's stock, however, and associating with territory outlaws. The two parted company.

Crawford confessed to the robbery, but denied the murder. He was a small man, poorly clad, with red face and short clipped black mustache.

When they began to look for a second rope he begged for whisky. It was given. He talked and then begged for more. He again addressed the crowd in Comanche, English and Spanish. Those who understood him made utterances in the same language. The rope was severed and it was put about his neck. He fell forward either in a faint or from the effects of the liquor he had drunk. He was soon strung up along with his companion, and their bodies still dangle in mid air.

Dr. Brown then read the cross-examination of the police court when Mrs. Davidson developed extraordinary details of masonry. She did not remember whether she had borne a child or ever had been arrested or had ever assumed other names than Davidson. Dr. Brown read Mrs. Davidson's denial that she had ever been in jail according to her recollection, and said he would present the records of the Maricopa County court to show that she served a term in jail in that state.

OAKLAND, February 26.—The Oakland police have broken up the most dangerous gang of gold brick operators that over infested California. Today they discovered the complete outfit the men, gold brick, assayer's tools, disguised and secured enough evidence to connect the principals with work in Stockton, San Jose, Oakland, Napa and San Francisco.

The man who was arrested on Saturday night and who gave his name variously as Mills, Gorian and Thompson is only one member of the gang. The men captured yesterday, who gave their names as Root and Ward, were an abundance of aliases and their records ascertainable by the police do not tally with the stories they tell.

How Mr. Nourse Sat Up With His Candle.

LET THE BADGERS ORGANIZE

The Little Suit of Jacob Hockenberry—Some More or Less Religious Notes.

The flame of the big candle in John C. Nourse's show window usually has flickered and gone out, after burning 58 hours and 20 minutes, or nearly 24½ days. The abruptness of its departure must have been a surprise to Mr. W. R. Mahoney, who guessed that it would burn 48,000 hours, or almost 53 years. Naturally Mr. Mahoney will be greatly disappointed to think that his dear little French great-grandchildren will not have an opportunity to see the candle burn. The flame died out at 20 minutes after 6 o'clock on Tuesday evening. On Monday evening the tower of grease was very short, and—but this leads to the story that I was about to tell.

Mr. Nourse was very faithful in charging his candle twice. He calculated that the day it might be would be the gloomiest that winter, when they will choose the darkest shadow, if their religion be true. Then again, when the oil is gone, they will find some of the thorns of Calvary are upon their brows; henceforth if they occasionally have financially "skinned" their fellow men, they will desert the great and prosperous tribe of skinners; henceforth they will earnestly strive to be brother to brother at the final judgment. Whatever might happen, he proposed to know exactly when the flame made its last flicker. As has been said, little of the luminary remained on Monday evening.

You have known of people who "eat up" with the sick, the dying, and the dead. You have known of young men who "eat up" with their best girl, and did not seem to mind it much. Did you ever know of a man who sat up with a candle? That was Mr. Nourse did. On that Monday evening he made arrangements for a session of himself and the candle, which should last until the latter was no more.

It was easy enough during the first part of the night. People could drop in to the store and talk with him about the crops and politics and the weather and other scientific topics, and they served to make the time pass quite pleasantly. But it was different after midnight. Mr. Nourse said that one hour after midnight was as long a day and a half at any other time. All alone, he would sit and do nothing else but study to have a hour, then he would look at his watch, and again ascertain that just thirteen minutes had elapsed since last he looked. Of course this became monotonous, but Mr. Nourse's heart remained true to the candle. Sometimes, along towards morning, he would sit up to him that he could see eight or ten candles at once. This was a great relief, however, to his heart, as he was bluffed with silence.

Then, as his invisible spirits were pulling him down with inangible cords, but his heart was true to 'ol'; that is, to the candle. He arose and walked the floor, and the echo of his footfalls seemed to say, "It won't—burn—up," but his heart was steadily beating. And so it goes. The Washington Post may be enjoyable, it adds a spice and variety to human services which could be obtained in almost no other way. Everybody enjoys it.
